It would be but trite to speak of it as ery foreible and eloquent production. It vas, moreover, temperate, practical an uggestive, dealing not only with the past out grappling with questions, political, so ial and moral, which are soon to come up or consideration and settlement. We ar rry that we cannot present it entire to ir readers. We can give only a meagre port, with the exception of the closing seage under the third head, which is iterally and entire.

The reverend gentleman opened the du course by alluding to the first Sabbath and its religious exercises, after the fall of For Sumter, four years ago. That day's teach-ing was "the Christian Necessity of War." He drew, with a few masterly strokes, the picture of the wide contrast of the two occa-sions and in this connection remarked that us, and in this connection remarked the the importance of the operations of the last four years cannot be fully realized now, nor al any time within the limits of the present generation. The first structural idea of the discourse was this:

1. We have now for the first time an assured nationality. Hitherto our Union has been but nominal and untried. All the forms of nationality have been present in our system, but nothing was sure in our government until the great test, the present war, had been applied. A nation is never sure until it has a history, until God has spoken, and put upon a people the divine stamp. It is not that we have created a claim to this assurd a stionality but the spleased God to or ed nationality, but it has pleased God to or dain us a lasting people. The discordan elements in our system,—such as mixed population, the seeming antagonism of secas in interests and sentiments, - were al uded to. They threatened our stability But these have all been fused in the terr le fire of the war, as representatives of a

No jurther attempt will ever be made to sever this Union of States. The experiment just made will be conclusive to What God bath joined together all time. What God hath joined togeth in there four solemn years, let not man dare attempt to put saunder.

2d. We have gained a character of our own and a conscious manhood. We have not had a national character these eighty years of our existence. Our faith in our in stitutions has been only opinion, not faith, for it was all untried our resources unknown But this war has developed in us full faith and knowledge in and of our institutions, our country and ourselves. We, and all other nations, now know our strength. Hitherto we bowed down to foreign opinion. Now and henceforth Europe is behind us We are no longer at school to the continent We have a truer self respect. We shall not think how we seem, concerned only to s what we are and may be
